

Hearing loss and tinnitus

Tinnitus is a condition that affects 15% of the adult population. There is a strong link between tinnitus and hearing loss. Four in five people who live with tinnitus also experience hearing loss.

The goal of tinnitus management is to make the condition less distressing. In some cases counseling is combined with amplification or sound enrichment.

Phonak Audéo Q

The Phonak Tinnitus Solution

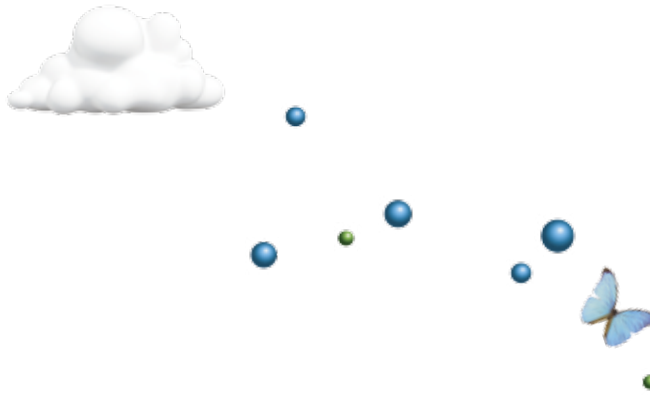

You and tinnitus

While there is no cure for tinnitus, there are many proven management strategies to help those who live with hearing loss and tinnitus. Central to many tinnitus management strategies is the use of sound. Known as sound therapy or sound enrichment, sound is used in a therapeutic way to shift attention away from the tinnitus. By giving you access to more sound, hearing aids serve as an effective approach for managing tinnitus.

We have designed the Phonak Audéo Q especially for those who have not yet had experience with hearing aids. Audéo Q delivers state of the art performance in an ultra-discreet design. The beauty of this solution is that it can reduce the annoyance of tinnitus while simultaneously improving your hearing ability.

Every Audéo Q model includes a "built-in" feature designed to reduce the annoyance of your tinnitus, especially in quiet environments.

Recognizing the individual nature of tinnitus we also offer the "Phonak Tinnitus Balance App". The App lets you customize your library of sounds and music giving access to sounds that you can use to manage your tinnitus.

Successful tinnitus management is multifaceted and incorporates more than just a sound enrichment. Your hearing care professional will personalize a program best suited for you.
